Amendment

Aa. whereas Integrated Renovation Programmes (IRPs) aim to be holistic, putting energy efficiency first, and to focus on the broader neighbourhood ecosystems, comprising of high energy reduction targets for individual buildings, and are based on best practice and understood as consisting of three main pillars: 1) Construction typology and building materials; i.e. requiring in-depth knowledge of age, use and construction method of buildings and the energy savings potential they represent, and a descriptions of the types of materials to be used throughout the course of a renovation, including their life-cycle impact; 2) Provision of and access to sustainable energy sources, namely on-site and nearby renewables, including district heating or cooling systems or using the thermal storage capacity of buildings, vehicle-to-X services and other flexibility options enabling sector integration; 3) Community/societal benefits, namely the integration of local communities into all energy renovation projects and programmes in order to tackle issues such as energy poverty, lack of technical and/or financial resources, information gaps; the implementation of this three-pillar approach ensures that as IRPs are devised and implemented, they will focus on the wider benefits that can be provided through energy renovations to people and communities such as energy efficiency, climate change resilience, industrial competitiveness, sustainability, social inclusion and accessibility;

37c. Calls on the Commission to develop a “EU Climate Calculator” (ECC) as part of its “Renovation Wave” that ensures an accurate and easy understandable labelling for building materials, products and services related to the renovation of the EU building stock towards 2050; stresses that the ECC should ensure a level-playing field for the key actors that are a part of - or related- to the IRPs ’s greenhouse gas (GHG) footprint within the EU building stock and that such a ‘holistic approach’ would open up for positive behavioural affects by EU citizens, industries, and SMEs; stresses that the concept must be based on the principles of circular and lifecycle economy in order to drive demand for climate-friendly goods “made in Europe”, strengthening the competitiveness of the EU building sector; suggests the Commission to use already known scientific methods when estimating GHG emissions, e.g. with inspiration from its “Product Environmental Footprint”;
